

In February, 1788 - the first grapes were planted at Sydney Cove from cuttings obtained from Rio de Janeiro and the Cape of Good Hope. These were later moved to Rose Hill, Parramatta.

In 1789, on his voyage to Botany Bay, Governor Phillip wrote;

In a climate so favourable, the cultivation of the vine may doubtless be carried to any degree of perfection; and should not other articles of commerce divert the attention of the settlers from this point, the wines of New South Wales may, perhaps, hereafter be sought with avidity, and become an indispensable part of the luxury of European tables.

The first known record of successful European grape production in Australia dates from 1791, when Captain Watkin Tench wrote:

On 24th January two bunches of grapes were cut in the Governor's garden from cuttings of vines brought three years before from the Cape of Good Hope.

The Governor's garden was located in what is now Sydney's Macquarie Street, one of the busiest streets in the city. Shortly after, John Macarthur established the earliest commercial vineyard in the coastal region around Sydney at 'Camden Park'

Gregory Blaxland arrived in New South Wales in 1806 and bought Brush Farm at Ermington on the Parramatta River. He had brought vines from the Cape of Good Hope and the species he planted seemed to be resistant to blight. By 1816 he was making commercial quantities of wine, taking a sample to London in 1822 where it was awarded a silver medal, the first of Australia's wine exports.

The wine Blaxland exported had 10 per cent of French brandy added to allow it to endure the voyage to England. In 1928 another of Blaxland's wines received a gold medal from the same Society.

Both viticulture and viniculture has come a long way since 1788. Our wine list at Parliament House reflects the history and diversity that regional New South Wales has to offer. We raise a glass to the pioneers who helped establish NSW as a premier region for winemaking in Australia.
